A Book a Day

AMERICA'S BATTLEFRONTS, by Frederick Gruin, illustrated by Graphic Associates. The Foreign Policy Association, N. Y., 1943. 96 pp.

When the American soldier landed in Africa, India, China, Britain, he put more than his feet on foreign soil. He put wisecracking, the great American institution of griping, Bing Crosby records, jitterbugging and a hurry-hurry atmosphere into wider circulation. Results of this new blood in global veins will be felt for years to come.

That the general public might be better equipped to understand the United States foreign policy in terms other than arms and men, this pamphlet gives basic descriptions of the locales to which the "American Way of Life" is slowly being spread. It gives social, economic and political facts about five sections of the earth—the territories of and surrounding the Panama canal, the north Atlantic, Africa and eastward, India and China, and the southwest Pacific.

With maps, apt adjectives and bits of humor, the pages are as good for reading as for reference. They were published as another of the Headline Books series by the popular education department of the Foreign Policy association, a non-profit American institution.
