THE SOVIETS AND OURSELVES

Edited by

TWO COMMONWEALTHS

By K. E. Holme

This second volume in the series uses diagrams and photographs as well as letterpress to explain the working of Soviet institutions and to compare them with our own. The pictorial aids to understanding are important, and should not be treated merely as illustrations. The diagrams have been prepared in collaboration with Dr Otto Neurath, of the Isotype Institute, Oxford.

Many books have been written about the economic and political constitution of the Soviet Union. This volume can claim to be unique in its purpose and approach. It explains how the public life of the Soviets works in practice, and what it means to the Soviet peoples themselves. In this way it does justice to the essential differences in British and Russian history, and reveals, beneath the divergence of methods which such varying traditions must impose, the common purposes and common directions of progress that are now emerging in our two commonwealths.

The author has had special opportunities of studying the working of Soviet institutions in recent years. Much of the detail which he contributes will be new to English readers, and will provide a valuable correction to misunderstandings which, unfortunately, are still prevalent among us.

THE SOVIETS AND OURSELVES

Edited by
Professor John Macmurray

Volume I in this series, already published, is:

LANDSMEN AND SEAFARERS

By Maurice Lovell

An illuminating treatment of the differences of circumstance and history that lie behind the contemporary expression of British and Soviet life. To understand our Soviet Allies we must know something of the conditions which have made Russia; of the resources, peoples, and territory, and natural wealth which she possesses; of the problems and difficulties which have dogged her progress through history and which face her to-day. Here this background is vividly and effectively described.

Volume III will be:

"HOW DO YOU DO, TOVARISH?"

By Ralph Parker

A description of daily life, work, and leisure. There are at least two very significant things which the Russian and the British people have in common. They are a warm human sympathy for the oppressed and the unfortunate, and a passionate love of freedom.
